Mr. Hill spoke, opposing the resolu-tion. He said the question presented by the resolution was one of law. The re-lunding set of 1870 declared the bonds to funding set of 1870 declared the bonds to be redeemable in coin of the then stand-ard value; that is, when the bonds became due they would be payable in whatever might be the coin of the United States, but that coin must be of the standard value of 1870. Should the coin of the United States then be silver the bonds would be payable in silver of the stand-ard value of 1870. The whole thing de-pended on the coinage law which might prevail in the United States at the matu-rity of the bonds. ity of the bonds. Mr. Matthews said: Supposing that

Mr. Hill—25 8 10 grains, of course. That is a simple question.
Mr. Matthews—Then if silver should be the coin, how many grains must be in a dollar?
Mr. Hill—412½, of course.
Mr. Matthews—Then what objection is there to making silver a coin?
Mr. Hill replied that he was not willing to any my what should be con thirty.

ing to say now what should be coin thirty years hence. With all due respect to the Statesmen of to-day he thought this work that Congress was engaged in was mere child's play. This Congress had no right to say what should be the coin of the country thirty years from now. Congress was now endeavoring to settle in advance what kind of coin the country should have thirty years from now, which was a great mistake. The Congress which should be in session then could settle the question. After the regular order of business, the consideration of the Colorado contested election case was resumed.

The discussion of the case consumed several hours. Mr. Butler in his speech favoring sending the case back to Colorado, warned his Democratic friends not to seat Patterson, who manifestly was not the choice of the people of Colorado, He (Butler) thought all the electoral machinery, returning boards, electoral courts, or anything else which stood between the will of the people and a fair count of the vote ought to be swept away. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side]. No machinery of election ever ought to put a man in office who had not been elected by a vote of the people. The Democratic must stop the cry of fraud in ne election which took these net leave.
